Nurse-Midwifery Specialty Coordinator

Tenure Track Faculty

The Nell Hodgson Woodruff School of Nursing seeks qualified faculty candidates to lead Nurse-Midwifery (NMW) Educational Program at Emory University. This vital leadership role has overarching responsibility to envision, transform, plan, implement and evaluate the NMW specialty major within the MSN program. The successful candidate will have a unique opportunity to explore and develop new program foci, including maternal, newborn and well women’s health care in rural Georgia and in countries where Emory nursing and nurse-midwifery faculty have a presence. In addition to leading the program, specific accountabilities include mentoring nurse-midwifery faculty, advising students, and collaborating with clinical site coordinators to develop and evaluate sites. In addition, the successful candidate serves as a clinical scholarship role model and expert teacher, fostering a positive learning environment.

Qualifications:

- Doctorally prepared (PhD or DNP)
- Eligible for, or hold Georgia nursing licensure
- ACNM certified
- Have five or more years of nurse-midwifery clinical practice and education experience
- Proven leadership experience and capabilities
- Actively engaged in scholarship
- Excellent interpersonal skills, with the ability to effectively work with faculty, students, and other health care leaders and members of the health care team
- Leadership within the specialty organization and program coordination experience preferred

Apply by Providing:

- Current CV
- Cover letter describing specific interest in the position; experience in nurse midwifery, scholarship, and teaching areas; and a summary of accomplishments including practice
- Contact information for three references

Apply online by visiting nursing.emory.edu/recruitment.

Applications accepted until April 30, or until filled, for a September 2015 start date.
